

Join us as we discuss what is Regenerative Agriculture and its benefits to farming and the planet Earth.

We will also review the short video by Now This - Can Regenerative Agriculture Reverse Climate Change?

Speakers from Tuskegee University students, faculty, staff or alumni, discussion their contributions to the field of Regenerative Agriculture.

Guest Speakers

Dean Walter Hill of Tuskegee University | College of Agriculture, Environment and Nutrition Sciences

Dr. Jasmine Ratliff (Dr. Jas) is a co-founder of The Garden of Tuskegee and Self-Determining Food Economies & Policy Manager for National Black Food & Justice Alliance.

Join in on the discussion of how Indigenous Agriculture practices that contribute to the growing field of Regenerative Agriculture.

Guest Speaker

Nathan Wright - Member of the Crane Clan, is a tribal member of the Sault Ste. Marie Tribe of Chippewa Indians with First Nations ancestry. Nathan is a descendant of Mide medicine people. He is an Indigenous Herbalist and certified mushroom expert.

Let's find out the benefits of new Technology has in aiding Regenerative Agriculture practices.

Guest Speakers

Malachi Thomas – A Tuskegee University student who constructed a chicken tractor during his 2020 CISC Summer Experience Internship at E.A.T. South in Montgomery, AL

Caylor Roling of E.A.T. South in Montgomery – Mrs. Caylor Roling will be available to discuss how the Chicken (AKA Bunny) Tractor works with regenerating the soil at the E.A.T. South Montgomery, AL urban farm.

District R – Overview - DISTRICTR, a database that helps community members redraw district boundaries and map their communities.

Our speakers will confer on the advantages of using Regenerative Agricultural practices help in the fashion Industry.

Guest Speaker

Dominique Drakeford – Chief curator of MelaninASS (Melanin and Sustainable Style) and Co-Founder of Sustainable Brooklyn

Akilah Stewart – Chief curator and Founder of FATRA ; Creative Waste Management

Miko Underwood is the Founder / Designer of Oak & Acorn - Only for the Rebelles, the first sustainable brand in Harlem, NY.